

Post: Indoor Vertical Farming Companies Grow Up

Mildly old - from late August 2020

"Plenty recently announced what has to be the biggest deal in its six-year history when it signed an agreement with the Albertsons grocery chain to sell its high-tech hipster greens at 430 California stores."

"AeroFarms from Jersey that basically uses moist air to grow plants, took in $100 million last year to bring disclosed funding up to $238 million. That doesn't include the slice of a $100 million investment that the Abu Dhabi government made into four agtech companies including AeroFarms back in April."

"third deep-pocketed startup, New Yawk-based Bowery Farming, grabbed a quick $50 million in 2019 for a total of $167.5 million. Not far behind is InFarm, a startup in Berlin that has raised about $134.5 million following a $100 million round last year, though the Financial Times reported that the German company raked in another $140 million this past June, with another $60 million to go. "
