

Post: Infarm Is in Talks to Go Public Via Merger with Kernel SPAC

Created by Brittany Bunk on 19-Jun-2021

Fund raise

Finance & Investment

20

3

1

3

Content

"Infarm, a startup focused on indoor and urban farming, is in advanced talks to go public through a merger with Kernel Group Holdings Inc., a blank-check firm, according to people with knowledge of the matter.

A transaction would value the combined entity at more than $1 billion, said one of the people, who requested anonymity because the talks are private. Terms aren't finalized and negotiations could still collapse."

Symbol: KRNL

read more at: <https://www.bloomberg.com/news/articles/2021-06-16/infarm-is-said-in-talks-to-go-public-via-merger-with-kernel-spac>

Add new comment

Comments

Haz F.

21-Jun-2021

If anyone has thoughts on how this and other indoor farming companies compare to AeroFarms (merging with $SV) I'd appreciate it.

1 Like | 1 Reply

Brittany Bunk

24-Jun-2021

Aerofarms builds the largest vertical farms in the world. They package their greens to ship them to supermarkets.

Infarm puts the farm inside of grocery stores. Since they're German-based, they're working with Kroger to do that. They're at the concept level, and have been for I'm guessing over a decade. Aerofarms is currently in stores - it's no longer a proof of concept - it's real with real revenue. Since Aerofarms is in New Jersey, they really only ship to New England. They're expanding, but it's mostly true.

Aerofarms is aeroponic, large scale. Infarm looks like individual plants that you can buy to eat - it's not what I'd call a true vertical farm - it's just plants stacked on multiple shelves in a grocery store in a refrigerator.

Aerofarms does more than just food - they create data that they can sell.

prad

20-Jun-2021

That's a big cap for something like this I think! Thanks for posting!

1 Like |

Claire Smith

 • 1 Like |  • 1 Reply

Brittany Bunk

20-Jun-2021

you're welcome - for a vertical-like farm to be within a grocery store's worth it!

