Are problems in developing countries worse than developed ones?

65   354   16   15   1k
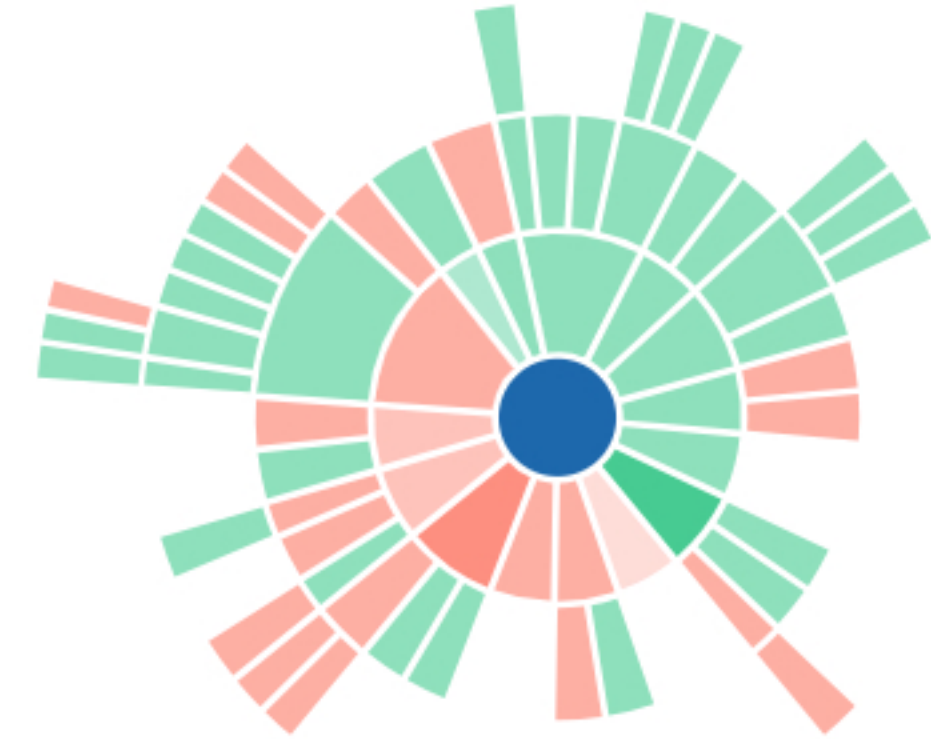

Background

Reference: developing/developed countries map

Third-world issues are pretty bad (lack of clean water/food, electricity, living in poverty, without shelter...), but does that mean we should turn a blind side to first-world problems that may be just as bad or worse. People usually make fun of first-world problems, because on the surface they do not seem too bad.

Underneath however, they are significant issues that need to be addressed (like underpopulation, automation, gentrification, globalization, shortening/lengthening lifespans, mental health issues...). Without addressing first-world problems, third-world countries have the potential to acquire them.

The whole world gets affected when first-world nations are not put together (especially since they are leaders, it is up to them to keep a reputation and image that the world lives by). We are open to developing this discussion to address these points and more.

Discussion Topology

Tags

Politics   Society   Philosophy   Ethics

Participants		Claims	Contributions	Votes
	vegforlife	31	157	1
	Roycello396	16	50	1
	iq1999	11	73	0
	nimchimpsky	2	19	0
	Ezrabuckley	1	3	1
	ffilz	1	1	0
	baalnaiaye	0	33	0
	Hebrewsfour12	0	3	0
	Kilgarrah	0	2	0
	Illyria	0	2	0
	boop	0	1	0
	Theo520	0	0	6
	GiuliaSantos	0	0	4
	etymology	0	0	1