

Post: Properly-implemented animal product bans

Created by Brittany Bunk on 14-Nov-2021

 Video

 Government

12

0

0

1

Content

Bans against bothering animals are in many laws. They're necessary, because humans aren't able to dictate another live's autonomy and will to live, so laws protect that - because laws are there to protect what's vulnerable from unfairness. They're going to be a part of a vegan world, but only if done properly where everyone's ok with it and they don't cause negative impacts - as that would make it accepted, so it would be enforceable and followed. Done the wrong way, and it won't work - none of this would happen.

The main issue is that certain groups of people are negatively impacted by them. However, people aren't an industry, so if we separate the person from the industry, we can ban an industry while the person isn't negatively impacted. A proper ban on animal products would involve a slow transition away from the animal product industry by helping those who are a part of it be in the same position as before, but not in that industry anymore (like a different industry or something else). It'll also be inspirational by showing the way to go and leading the way when others take no action, as seen below:

Yogi bans meat, liquor trade in Mathura: Watch what he wants these traders to sell

Add new comment

Comments

14-Nov-2021

there are places in india where you can't rent, unless you are veg.

 • 1 Like |  • 1 Reply

Brittany Bunk

14-Nov-2021

I didn't know that!

