

Search

Post: Should we restructure the global economy before restarting it and if so, how?

Created by Brittany Bunk on 12-May-2020

Discussion

Economy

9

0

0

0

Content

Continuing the discussion from the comments section here, the coronavirus, although terrible for health and the economy, has done well for climate change. If we resume 'business as usual', then the environmental impacts will resume: air pollution, greenhouse gas emissions, biodiversity loss, etc.

So here are the questions to think about are:

- How do we make an economy sustainable, non-disruptive to/caring for the environment, etc.?
- Should we reopen the economy?
 - if so, would we be able to make it an environmental/people-oriented one instead of financially-oriented (i.e. gravitate towards a profit-motive)
- Should jobs be a necessary part of one's life, or should we try to be self-sufficient?
- Should we transition our lifestyles:
 - towards the digital age to where people work remotely?
 - animal agriculture goes away?

If there's any other questions I miss, they can be talked about too.

This discussion is deciding the global economic direction, followed by its layout.

Comments

Be the first to comment

