The family has to be deeply involved every step of the way.

SUGGESTED CON

The family has to be deeply involved even if the education is in person.

All institutionalized education should go completely virtual.

SUGGESTED CON

Not entirely. Why does it have to be either or? Why not a hybrid? Not everything is learnable virtually. What is best taught virtually should be offered that way. It is not difficult to determine what can be taught best virtually and what cannot. Small classes for students to learn how to resolve conflict, share, collaborate, and love each other well are likely all that needs to happen in meat space.

All institutionalized education should go completely virtual.

SUGGESTED CON

Real social interaction with peers and the model-role of a human teacher are irreplaceable.

Fully digital education might lead to physical inactivity of students.

SUGGESTED CON

You could have separate mandatory physical education programs for school age children. They might even be more effective, as they can focus solely on the physical health of the children, and not be linked to academics.

People may be able to use what supplies they already have (which shouldn't be hard, as most people have smartphones) to access content.

SUGGESTED CON

Children ready to learn basic literacy do not often have smart phones

Job security would become an issue.

SUGGESTED PRO

Since many online education companies are unregulated

All institutionalized education should go completely virtual.

SUGGESTED CON

No, people were much smarter when classes consisted of books and normally instead of constantly distracting themselves with the unnecessary extra programs that don't teach you anything with computers. And this is coming from a cpu fan, so that should say alot.

While digital has great penetration potential, it has not shown better student outcomes, so fully digital setups may not solve the global educational challenge of quality.

SUGGESTED PRO

Most online courses and materials are not designed with learning science principles, so they won't perform better

Taxa (112)

Job security would become an issue.

SUGGESTED PRO

Online education companies come and go more often, so educators are more likely to lose their jobs with little notice

Transitioning to virtual education is not difficult.

SUGGESTED CON

This switch is actually notoriously difficult

In some ways, it's very similar to brick-and-mortar.

SUGGESTED CON

Discussion classes are useless online despite Skype and message boards

It will provide more jobs for teaching subjects (i.e. niche- or experiential) outside of general education requirements

SUGGESTED CON

Most subjects don't require field-expert teachers, so demand for expertise won't rise with online education.

It will provide more jobs for teaching subjects (i.e. niche- or experiential) outside of general education requirements

SUGGESTED CON

Since Online schools have lower teacher/student ratios, there would be fewer jobs available to all.

Subjects responsible for physical exercise require space and dedicated equipment that can not be provided digitally or online.

SUGGESTED CON

Those subjects certainly can be conducted presently via WiFi and mobile phones, and in future will be via hotspots on phones or WiFi and use of VR.

Children are less likely to make friends if they are not meeting others in person.

SUGGESTED PRO

The students would be socially isolated at home.

People may not be able to afford electronic equipment.

SUGGESTED CON

Educational facilities could provide (lend) students with basic equipment for the time they are enrolled.

Progress bar: 100% (10/10)

All institutionalized education should go completely virtual.
