

A college degree leads to a job.

Pros	Cons
SUGGESTED PRO Puedes tener un buen trabajo o puesto sin un título universitario.	SUGGESTED CON No puede ser contratado sin presentar lo que le avale que hayas terminado una carrera universitaria.
SUGGESTED PRO It is becoming increasingly difficult to get a job without a college degree.	SUGGESTED CON A college degree does not always lead to jobs due to lack of experience. Experience through internships, jobs, volunteer opportunities is a large indicator for people getting jobs.
Studies show that unemployment rates of college degree holders are low and consists mostly of those who are between jobs (frictional unemployment), instead of never being employed. Unemployment for them occur mainly after having a job, instead of no job at all.	HAVING a college degree helps, but thing is we live in a society that needs skills more than "smarts".
Some jobs are very strict on their requirements because they require a degree. Since there is less competition for those jobs (as not everyone has a degree), some of them will have no applicants and the person with the degree will be hired guaranteed due to a lack of competition.	Some people with a college education do not have a job.
Some jobs with high responsibilities, such as in the health sector, strictly require a degree. Having that degree allows you access to some jobs that ungraduated people can't access.	Economic factors influence whether or not a person can find a job.
More people are getting degrees, which shows people believe it will get them a job (as they see successes of previous people).	Graduates are not entitled to do better than anyone at a job just because of a piece of paper. It's all about results.
Going to a college with a "guaranteed job program" would set a person up for that.	Having a degree may certainly open up more opportunities for jobs as there may be a requirement for a degree which eliminates those who do not. It does not guarantee a job but then that is solely reliant on applicant doing well in an interview and showing more than exam techniques.
	College degrees do not always lead to getting a job when there is a mismatch of major to profession.
	There are better qualifications than a degree for a job.
