Pros	Cons
It has a greater reach.	Some people can only vote in person.
It'll prevent voter fraud.
It'll help update outdated voting methods.	No some people don't even vote unless they want to vote in a real building. Taking away the option of real votes (no matter how good i-votes are), will get society a lot less votes. Not to mention the corruption of only i-votes and how many hackers could change the vote of that within an hour.
This would create uniformity through nationwide standardization of how voting takes place.	It's susceptible to hacking.
Voters will have convenient access to information on the website like they are voting on, which they can utilize before and while casting a vote (like popups for information).	There are privacy concerns.
Some areas are open to adopting i-voting.	Implementation may disenfranchise voters.
It's more environmentally friendly.	It'll require an enormous infrastructure overhaul.
In India, there's a unique identification card known as Aadhaar card: a person's basic details along with biometric data (retina and fingerprint) are attached to it. I-votes can be cast from phones, which can be then linked to Aadhaar and after authenticated using the fingerprint sensor of phone (fingerprint sensors are becoming more prevalent on devices).	Websites can crash if there's are too many people on it and having the entire US on a website for voting could cause crashing severe enough that people wouldn't want i-voting anymore.
The technology's there to make it possible.	It's more difficult to prevent people from voting multiple times.
The votes will be added in sooner, so they have more of a chance of being counted.
