The below these should probably be claims.

[[BestVO] How come?

View (1.8k) · 1y

Because from what I have seen in other discussions these claims are nothing more than claims, they don't bring a new perspective that merits them being a thesis.

BestVO (145) · 1y · accepted by you (1.8k)

[[BestVO] True. Since everything here is going to be a pro, that's why I feel it up the way I did.

So if the discussion could have been "Life will be more positive once humans have achieved a longer lifespan" this eliminates the need for these theses by arguing from a point rather than having an open question.

BestVO (145) · 1y · accepted by you (1.8k)

[[BestVO] That's not what I was hoping to do with this discussion. I want to paint a picture in my mind of a life of a person with a long lifespan using the claims here. You could start a new discussion like that if you want to, so it's something completely different than this. This is a neutral discussion, not a polarizing one.

View (1.8k) · 1y

[[BestVO] Any claim/thesis that you make under here is by nature going to be polarized as you are assuming some positive or negative outcome. Neutral "discussions" don't exist in that sense.

BestVO (145) · 1y · accepted by you (1.8k)

[[BestVO] under the sub-claims, yes. However, at the top, it's neutral (or just all pro?)

View (1.8k) · 1y

I don't see how all of the below claims are neutral.

BestVO (145) · 1y · accepted by you (1.8k)

[[BestVO] the top theses all agree and add onto the top thesis (so if anything, are all pro). However, they're polarizing in itself, so they get debated as pros/cons. But they're neutral to assumption in the top thesis it took.

[[BestVO] "But they're neutral to assumption in the top thesis is true." How can something be true if no statement is made.

BestVO (145) · 1y · accepted by you (1.8k)

[[BestVO] ok what you're asking

View (1.8k) · 1y

[[BestVO] You know, whatever this is not going to go anywhere

We won't achieve longer lifespans because the quality of life after about 100 will be too low (loss of mental capacity, incontinence, limited mobility, poor eyesight, poor hearing, pain, death of all our friends etc) and we will choose to die.

There will be more elders than children since humans achieve longer lifespans.

People may be more educated, as they have more time to learn subjects.

People may engage in unhealthy behaviors without feeling as many consequences as when shorter lifespans existed.

The socio- economic system would be redesigned.

People will make important decisions later in life things like choosing a job, getting married, and having kids, as they have more time to plan them out.

The world would be less livable.

The quality of life on Earth will decrease due to overpopulation.

Humans will become more like gods (see traits of gods).

Humans will get closer to obtaining godly characteristics like: eternally, eternally youth, and et high intellect.

There would be more aversion to dying.

People may become more isolated.

They may have lower morbidity levels.

People would probably have less kids, because if they live a long time, they contribute to overpopulation. This would make their life less filled with experiences of having children, thus decreasing their quality-of-life from this process.
