

The music of the past was better than music generated more recently (i.e. post-90s/00s).

Today's music is just (loud?) wallpaper music. I like mine you like yours. Accept Reply

8mo ago Nils2004(1) Invite SUGGESTED PRO I agree with your point, but today, more music than ever is being produced. More songs than you even can listen to is produced. Almost every week, Billie Eilish is making a new song. In the past, this never happened to anyone. A band or singer only did like one song in a month. The music sound was even better in the past. There wasn't electronic music which today is almost in every song. Accept Reply	8mo ago bbradno(3) Invite SUGGESTED CON The music of the past is collectively part of the music of today, and the future. The culture of past music resonates throughout modern music through remixes, sampling, and stylistic influence. In recent decades, due largely in part from the internet, music has exploded into hundreds of genres and sub-genres, often redefining what the word music even means. Accept Reply
10mo ago ezrom62(10) Invite SUGGESTED CON Music is and will always be a reflection of society, culture, values and generation. Right now, there are rap songs that utilize rhythm, tangential associations and word play in a style not seen in other genres. Accept Reply
Technology has made music less authentic and more manufactured and fake due to the fact that its not 100% human (so not all of the music is coming directly from the artist, which makes it lesser quality).
There was more experimentation and push to put out something interesting and new with the older music.
Newer pop music is troublesome.
When music gets released online, people can see it immediately. Yet, people crave content and artists need to keep people's attention spans going until they release more content before they go away. These days, artists have less time than ever to prepare and create new music before they lose their audience, which leads could lead to lack of depth (deep meaning and details) form valuing commercialization more.
A lot of old rap music is better and thought out then than today's.
Music from the past had good meaning and had good beat, which isn't present in today's music.
	The nature of the progression of the music industry allows new music to be better than the past.
	It's not possible to make an objective comparison of the two at this time (or possibly ever) to be able to say the music of the past is better than now.
	Quantitatively, more music is being produced now than ever before. Ceteris paribus, this would mean that more good music is being produced.
	There are many songs from the past that were not great.
	A lot of good songs have come out of new music.
	Music of today takes interesting and unique twists compared to music of the past.
