They're put in cages unable to see the sun and then killed through gas chambers and the removal of the head. It lacks nutrients? Solution: Cultured meat. Accept Reply	SUGGESTED CON 2d ago Stephanrg(1) Invite Eating meat enabled the survival and evolution of some species that they alone could not. Accept Reply
A vegan society would be better for the environment.	SUGGESTED CON 2d ago JaysonW(8) Invite Other countries don't have the supplies or farmland that is suitable enough for a vegan diet. Lots of countries rely on livestock more than they do on farmland. Accept Reply
The meat production industry is itself unethical.	SUGGESTED CON 14d ago Synesthesia(25) Invite Veganism itself isn't good, it's concern for sentient beings and the environment that is the underlying good, and this can be achieved by other means. Accept Reply

If all humans were vegan, animals would not be killed or made to suffer needlessly, which is the moral thing to do.	Veganism is not feasible for less privileged societies or individuals.
A world of veganism would be a more ethical world: its morals would bring benefits to human society.	A vegan diet lacks specific essential nutrients.
A vegan diet is healthier for humans.	An individual should be free to choose any food they want to eat (without interference).
Individuals who follow a vegan lifestyle are better off than those who don't.	Humanity becoming vegan does not resolve all the issues it tries to fix.
	Veganism is too hard for people to follow and adopt, making a vegan world nearly impossible.
