

There is no such thing as "vegan"

Pros	Cons
Many vegan products contain and/or utilize animals/animal products in its production process.	Just because something is vegan, does not mean it cannot exploit animals and lifeforms, especially if they're not harmed in the process.
There is hardly a way to avoid exposure to animal products. Even if we leave Earth (where animals seem to not exist), if we bring anything from here with us, then we risk bringing products that involve animal influences and products/exploitation.	The vegan society defines veganism as "Veganism is a way of living which seeks to exclude, as far as is possible and practicable, all forms of exploitation of, and cruelty to, animals for food, clothing or any other purpose." It's impossible to only buy things that have never touched an animal product but that is not the definition of veganism.
Human bodies are not vegan.	Veganism in its truest sense is against the exploitation of animals and living beings. Natural processes and those that animals undertake by their own free will without interference or exploitation are in fact vegan. This includes breathing, pollination, defecating and dying from natural causes.
	The accusation that vegans fail to be vegan because they cannot be perfect is an external one imposed by people who do not understand veganism.
	Even though there is no such thing as "vegan", there are ways to get as close to "vegan" as possible.
